Name of the workshop/ seminar/ conference: Seminar on the and Whys of Research in Film Studies

REPORT

The seminar aimed to provide the students (an Attendee toll of 52) with a comprehensive understanding of the field of film studies, exploring its significance, scope, and relevance in contemporary society. Through presentations, discussions, and interactive sessions, participants delved into the fundamental questions of what film studies entail and why its research is essential for both academic and cultural discourse. The seminar commenced with an insightful keynote address by Dr.Sushil Kumar R, Associate Professor and a renowned scholar in Film studies. He provided an overview of the evolution of film studies as an academic discipline, tracing its roots from the early days of cinema to its current interdisciplinary nature. Emphasizing the multifaceted role of film in shaping cultural identities, ideologies, and artistic expressions, the keynote set the stage for deeper exploration.

The session Introduction to Film Studies: Defining the Discipline elucidated the foundational concepts and methodologies of film studies used in research. His second session, Historical Perspectives: Tracing the Evolution of Cinema provided a historical overview of cinema's development, highlighting key movements, genres, and technological advancements that have shaped the medium and how research has changed with the changing phases. The third and final session Film Theory and Criticism: Understanding Approaches to Analysis, delved into the contemporary theoretical frameworks of film studies and the scope for further research. The seminar concluded with a dynamic group discussion amongst students on the takeaways.
